A New American Chief Executive and the Election Drama

The Americans have launched a ridiculous chess game about their stooges, tapping them on the back to run for the president. Even, US president Obama invited some of them to participate in a swearing-in ceremony at the White House. By such gestures, Obama intended to show that he wanted to get a particular agent installed at the saddle of power in Afghanistan and end the Karzai corruption-ridden Administration. However, it did not transpire. After the passage of some time, the promise was just forgotten.

Like his other pledges, commitments which proved to be bogus, superficial and deceiving, it also proved to be so. Soon the Afghan guests at the oath-taking ceremony fell from sight. Instead, a deal was struck with Karzai, the mayor of Kabul, who ostensibly promised to obey every order and demand of the new American president Obama.

Some media sources have reported that even Mr. Karzai went to the extent that he agreed to the creation of a new slot for a new US chief executive for Afghanistan during his recent trip to America. The chief executive will regularly monitor and control all government affairs.

The imminently expected appointment of chief executive officer for Afghanistan by the Americans and the approval of Mr. Karzai as a candidate for the next election are indicative of the fact that the Americans are not willing to alleviate the sufferings of the Afghans—though these problems are the outcome of the corruption-ridden administration and mafia-like State of Afghanistan.

A stooge with such debasement that he is ready to sign any document concerning occupation and proselytizing without any demur is certainly a nominee that Americans want to keep installed in Kabul. Moreover, there will be a powerful American executive, sitting side by side with Karzai in Kabul whereas Karzai will not have the gut to oppose him. With such conditions and strings attached to his nomination, the Americans will not be so insane to look for another surrogate or invest in another individual.

Similarly, the appointment of a new commander for Afghanistan is also a link of the series. It indicates that the previous US strategy has failed to achieve its target while its new strategy is not delivering.

Robert Gates says, the appointment of the new commander is part of the military plan. However, in fact, the American military strategy has failed as well as their generals, commanders and politicians (to achieve the expansionist goals as per the pre-planned map). They are facing disgrace and will end up withdrawing from Afghanistan humiliatingly. The Americans did not spare to get underway all tactical plans including the increase in troops, formation of Arbakais and militias and election dramas. But they enlarged their economic burden and met with defeat at the battle field. This is not our claim. All observers assert in the international media that Americans are destined to defeat in Afghanistan militarily and politically.

A few months prior to the election campaign in Afghanistan, the American officials and Western media were lambasting Karzai and his administration as being corrupt and incompetent. But now they have come round that there was not a suitable leadership to fill up the gap. Thus, they have turned to Karzai and his notorious and corrupt team once again. They are urging them to run for the president and assume the political leadership of Afghanistan.

It is clear that Americans are smarting from a leadership lacuna in Afghanistan which has led to failure and disgrace. Because of this, the Americans have resorted to nominating new envoys and ambassadors. Militarily, The Americans strategy is approaching fiasco.

We have witnessed in the past years, the Americans transferred and nominated their commanders. Every commander was bragging about new strategy and experiences but after the passage of time, it dawned upon him that this war was not winnable.

The new approach of a new commander and envoy is one of the Roberate Gates pipedreams who made it public for the consumption of mass media but so far no tangible result is seen. He is trying to show to the people of America and his Allies that he feels his responsibility as a minister of defense and wants to save America and NATO from a would-be defeat and disgrace. But with him, the time is finished. All his efforts tantamount to a drowning man who catches at a straw to save himself but is not able to do so.

Ganges went to grave with his covetous dream of bringing Afghanistan under his control unfulfilled. The beginning and end of the Britain is too well-known to the Americans. They wanted to impose on the Afghans a surrogate, Shah Shuja, a de facto replica of Karzai but instead, faced a humiliating consequence. The injuries of the former Soviet Union are still fresh. They shored up Babrak Karmal and his cohorts but, the Afghans as per their traditions, gave them a lesson.

The Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan reminds the Americans and their Allies of the past history of Afghanistan that even before Chris Era, the Alexander could not occupy this land of the free people. The Americans should know that they will not achieve the goal by nomination of envoys and commanders; the boasting up of stooges through fake elections; deployment of new troops and bombardment of civilians. Soon or later, they will have to acknowledge their defeat in Afghanistan. But better be to acknowledge it now and try to find a logical exit strategy for the occupation forces.
