SUMMARY

According to military and media accounts, Cpl. Anthony Joseph Boneca of the Lake Superior Scottish Regiment was killed during a firefight with Taliban insurgents approximately 25 kilometres west of Kandahar. The incident occurred at approximately 090830 Jul 06 Kandahar time (090000EDT Jul 06) while Canadian infantry were sweeping and clearing the village of Pashmul, in Zhari District, Kandahar Province in southwestern Afghanistan. Media reports indicate Cpl. Boneca was shot in the chest just above his bullet-proof vest by one of two Taliban gunmen from the roof of a compound as he was trying to enter the building. Cpl. Boneca was evacuated by helicopter to a military hospital at Kandahar Airfield, where he was pronounced dead.

The Soldier

Media reports indicate Corporal Anthony Joseph Boneca was a part-time soldier with the a reservist who joined Thunder Bay's Lake Superior Scottish Regiment (LSSR) out of high school four years ago. Media reports that in 2006, Cpl. Boneca was an instructor for a high school co-op recruit training program at the Armouries in Thunder

Bay. Media reports quoting family members indicate Cpl. Boneca had previously done tours that included guard duty in the United Arab Emirates, as well as several trips to Kabul before he arrived in southern Afghanistan in February 2006. Cpl. Boneca was serving with Task Force Afghanistan as part of the 1st Battalion Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry (1 PPCLI) Battle Group at the time of his death.

The Land

The village of Pashmul, in Zhari District, Kandahar Province, is located in southwestern Afghanistan approximately 25 kilometres west of Kandahar City. The Pashmul area is considered a major gathering point for Taliban, who have been recently ambushing convoys and attacking Afghan National Police outposts. Defeating the Taliban in Panjwei and Zhari Districts is seen as crucial to securing peace in Kandahar and the surrounding area. In addition to recent Canadian actions in the area, American forces reported capturing two Taliban suspects in the area in late May, and an American Provincial Reconstruction Team (PRT) had delivered medical and humanitarian aid in the area June 3-4, 2006.

The Battle

The unit Cpl. Boneca was working with was part of Operation Zahar (Pashtu for "Sword"). Operation Zahar was a joint Afghan National Army/Coalition security operation aimed at removing the Taliban threat west of Kandahar City, while strengthening the Afghan Government's authority in the area. Media reports indicate three companies of PPCLI troops, as well as engineers and other members of the Afghan National Army (ANA) 205th Corps and their American trainers, were involved in the engagement. A PPCLI company commander is quoted saying the operation was a, "division main effort," suggesting it would receive priority in any calls for fire.

Although Canadian troops had engaged Taliban forces in the area at least five times in the past few months, previous skirmishes resulted in some Canadian injuries, but no major, protracted exchanges of fire. In contrast, one Canadian military spokesperson described this engagement as, "pretty intense, and there has been a number of firefights." One theory for the heavier-than-usual fighting on the weekend is because Coalition forces had cut off usual escape routes, and were deployed in larger numbers than usual.

The force came under fire in maze-like grape orchards while carrying out a sweep of the village of Pashmul. One reporter called the repeated exchanges between Coalition and Taliban forces in the area, "a lethal cat-and-mouse game." The reporter, monitoring radio traffic of the battle from Alpha and Bravo Companies while embedded with Charlie Company, reported that she'd heard indications of RPG attacks, small-arms fire, "women and children fleeing," and a group of Canadians being "pinned down in a trench" coming under RPG fire, and harrasing fire from grape orchards in the area.

The Canadians and ANA reportedly assaulted the a mud-walled house (reportedly a mud-baked compound used to dry grapes) in Pashmul three times, but were forced to withdraw each time. Two Taliban were reportedly on the roof, probably located in a small hut on the roof with good coverage of the surrounding “low walls of the grape fields and adjacent small huts”.

Cpl. Boneca was reportedly shot at approximately 0830 local time (100001EDT Jul 06) as he headed up the stairs of one of three mud-walled compounds by one of two men on the roof. Media reports indicate Cpl. Boneca was shot in the neck just above the ceramic plate of his bullet-proof vest, “the bullet tearing downward through his body.” After being shot, Cpl. Boneca was carried to a medical aid point by colleagues on a black rubber sheet, reportedly with an airway already inserted to assist breathing. On arrival to at the medical aid point, the medic reportedly said there were no vital signs. After evacuation via helicopter, Cpl. Boneca was pronounced dead in a military medical facility at Kandahar airfield.

After Boneca’s death, various other assets - including artillery from the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, Predator UAVs, Apache AH-64 attack helicopters, A-10 Warthogs - dropped other ordnance (including 500 lb bombs) on the compound. Troops on the scene reportedly tossed in grenades, and called in snipers to provide covering fire as well.

When an embedded reporter left the site at approximately 1500 local time (100600EDT Jul 06), one of the Taliban on the roof was reportedly wounded but still firing at Coalition troops. While numbers of enemy dead were not publicly available, media reports indicate one Taliban suspect was arrested, and one “critically injured” suspect was flown to Kandahar for treatment.

Media reports of Canadians using restraint within their rules of engagement include the following (all from Christie Blatchford of the Globe & Mail, who was embedded with the troops):

- “At one point during the weekend, with the help of their invaluable interpreters, the soldiers made a forceful appeal for the Taliban to surrender; they were invited to walk into the open and meet at the building the Canucks call “the white school” and be greeted peacefully. The allotted half-hour passed with no takers.”
- “At another point, the soldiers spotted five Taliban walking along the edge of the tree line, had them clearly in their sights, and could have easily killed them. But Major Fletcher ordered his men to check their fire until he was assured that there were no ANA in the area; the men by the trees were wearing pants, not typical Afghan dress, and appeared relaxed. By the time all the attached ANA soldiers were accounted for, the men had disappeared into the forest.”
- “The soldiers always do a “battle damage assessment,” which at first I thought meant a tally of ground gained and lost, but in fact is the process by which the Canadians determine if they have taken action that saw, say, a farmer’s wall damaged by a vehicle, and then arrange to fix the wall. This Canadian niceness does not extend to battles in which they are engaged by the Taliban, but still, as Major Fletcher said, it's an easy enough gesture to make.”

The Return

Unconfirmed reports on a bulletin board indicate the commanding officer of the Lake Superior Scottish Regiment went to the family's home at approximately 090300EDT Jul 06 to inform them of Cpl. Boneca's death. A ramp ceremony took place in Kandahar on the morning of the morning of 10 Jul 06 to mark the departure of Cpl. Boneca's body, but funeral arrangements were still not publicly available as of 101540EDT Jul 06.

The Concerns?

William Babe, Cpl. Boneca's uncle, is quoted in various media indicating Cpl. Boneca was going to leave the military when he returned from Afghanistan because of some dissatisfaction. Babe cited, "things he'd seen, and things he'd had to do, and didn't want to." Babe is quoted saying Cpl. Boneca saw a major difference between previous deployments to Afghanistan and the tasking he was involved in while in Kandahar. Other reports suggest the Kandahar deployment was expected to be lower-intensity patrolling instead of in-contact combat missions.

Some media reports indicate Boneca had complained of a long-range patrol that was supposed to last seven days, but ended up lasting three weeks, with food and water reportedly having to be rationed. Another media report indicated that Boneca had "fractured an ankle" but was kept on a patrol for a week before being able to have the reported injury assessed.

Other media reports indicate Cpl. Boneca may have wanted to leave so badly, "he even considered pretending to be suicidal, and asked an army priest if talk of suicide would get him discharged."

Speaking at a media conference on July 10, 2006, Defence Minister Gordon O'Connor said, "he would be surprised to discover soldiers were being misled on what their operations would consist of," adding, "These operations are well-planned, orders are given, they're all the way down the chain of command." O'Connor said reservists who travel to Afghanistan get the same training as other personnel, but that once they are in the region, they cannot choose to opt out.
